MRS. BOTHE: Could I suggest perhaps that the notice go to the court, to the Court of Appeals or administrative officer of the court or some judicial, quasi judicial agency? For instance, if I want to know if a pardon has been granted or what action has been taken, I would like to be able to go to some place, perhaps not the Governor's office, and have a record there to be informed by. This provision is so meaningless.

JUDGE ADKINS: Dick Case points out if this were followed it would become a part of the Senate or House journal but more than that, I don't know the routine but if a man is pardoned, isn't it normally entered on the docket in the case in which he was convicted?

THE CHAIRMAN: Certainly the official public record would be the receipt of the message which would appear in the journals of the two Houses.

JUDGE ADKINS: That is right. It would go across the reading desk and become a part of the journal.

MRS. BOTHE: I don't even know that pardons
